Not your father's Convention Center.

The Washington State Convention Center Addition (“The Summit”) is dedicated to embracing its surrounding neighborhood. Rejecting the typical big-box design approach, one of The Summit’s primary objectives is to create a vibrant pedestrian street-level experience. A significant portion of The Summit’s development budget is allotted for outdoor seating, landscaping, pedestrian plazas and market hall. A bevy of new retail, both within The Summit and in the vicinity, will have an immeasurable impact on foot traffic, spending and neighborhood ambiance.

THE PIKE PINE RENAISSANCE

$30 million in public/private partnerships will connect the new Waterfront with the city’s densest neighborhoods via wide, continuous and landscaped pedestrian experiences.

CASE STUDY

450 Alaskan

We constructed this state-of-the-art creative office building to accommodate the growing number of companies locating in Pioneer Square. Tucked between existing brick-and-beam buildings, it was essential to seamlessly incorporate the development into its historic surroundings, as well as anticipate the changes ahead with the demolition of the viaduct and the development of the waterfront. Today, this mid-rise office tower, home to Saltchuk's headquarters, combines a timeless brick façade with modern features, unobstructed views of Elliott Bay, a breathtaking rooftop amenity deck and street-level retail.
